

Like shutter panels with divider rails, double hung panels have a top and bottom section of louvers that can be opened and closed independently of one another.

Double hung shutters, however, are actually two separate panels stacked on top of one another.

This allows the top panels to be opened against the wall while the bottom panels stay in place (or vice versa).

Double hung panels are approximately 10% more than standard shutters.

